Showing Off Our Naval Strength

The Soviet Union has the biggest submarine force in the world. The U.S. Navy is unequalled in power. These two basic military postulates are being exploited for all they're worth, politically, in the muscle-flexing over Berlin.

Russia chose Soviet Navy Day, July 31, to parade its sea power in the Neva River off Leningrad. The ships ranged from a cruiser to small craft. A number of conventional submarines rode at anchor, but the missile-armed atomic submarines - in which Russia claims numerical superiority to the United States - were not in sight. Russia, contrary to its boasts, may have only two or three nuclear subs, these being almost operational. At any rate, our carrierbased aircraft, reinforcing our Polaris subs and land-based bombers encircling the Soviet Union, give us greater capability to deliver nuclear warheads. Russia has no aircraft carriers.

On the other hand, conventional warfare over Berlin would strain U.S. naval resources. Shipping lanes could be mined by Soviet aircraft such as the Bounder bomber shown at the Moscow air show July 9, and by the vast Soviet sub fleet. The U.S. Navy does not have enough antisubmarine ships and aircraft, but on the same day as the Soviet naval show, the Pentagon disclosed plans to reactivate at least 40 mothballed ships - 22 troop and cargo transports and 18 or more small antisub craft.

As for defense, the month-long exercises the Navy is beginning today in cooperation with Latin American forces are frankly intended to demonstrate power to defend the Western Hemisphere against submarine attack. U.S. naval units will consist of four destroyer types, the submarine USS Clamagore and a detachment of P2V Neptune aircraft of Patrol Squadron II.

The U.S. ships will circumnavigate South America. It's a reasonable assumption that they'll have an attentive audience; Russian radar ships and trawlers have rather a habit of turning up in waters far from home.

Not Really A Hoax

The British taste of humor is pungent and daring but rarely has it reached such perfection as the British Broadcasting Corporation perpetrated. They manufactured a composer, Piotz Zak, said to be a Pole and they played a composition by the aforesaid Zak, entitled "Mobile for Tape and Percussion." No such Zak exists or ever existed. No Polish composer bears such a name. The name is phoney from every standpoint, just as the so-called music is phoney. B.B.C. was having lots of fun and did not get caught.

According to Susan Bradshaw, an employe of the B.B.C. music division, she and Hans Keller, another employe, pulled off the hoax with official approval. "We dragged together all the instruments we could find and went around the studio banging them."

I wish I might have heard their satire. I am sure that it could not be very different from some of the modern composers who seek to prove not that they can make music but rather that they have been to school and have learned instrumentation. They establish beyond doubt that they know the difference between a tympanum and a bass drum, to say nothing of the difference between a bassoon and a bass fiddle.

Having established their great knowledge of the mechanics of music-making devices, these composers need ideas, emotions, sincerity to put together something that can be remembered and repeated. This takes not only intelligence but maturity. This, of course, does not come readily. Wagner, for instance, wrote purposeful music. He had a goal, an ideal, a passion. He revised the ancient traditions of the Teutonic peoples, just as Verdi inspired revolutionary nationalism as an Italian ideal. If such composers dragged together a bunch of instruments and just made noise, they would undoubtedly have done as well as the present noisemakers who only make so much noise to cover up

But the B.B.C. folks did not lack ideas, just as Wu Ting-fang knew what he was doing when he invented Chop Suey. It is said that when he was ambassador to the United States, some callers asked him if he could concoct some Chinese food for them. They did not know that no Chinese gentleman goes into a kitchen and that their request was vulgar.

But Wu Ting-fang was no vulgarian. Politely, he went into his kitchen, took all the leftovers in the icebox, threw them into a pot, covered them with soy bean oil, and a little of this and that for flavoring, heated the stuff and called it Chop Suey. Perhaps that is how some ancient Hungarian invented goulash or some Frenchwoman discovered the possibilities of bouillabaisse. (The same tale is told of Lin Hung-

B.B.C. manufactured a musical Chop Suey, without meaning, without form or taste, a confusion of sound and the music critics listened attentively and wrote learned reviews. It is like Fritz Kreisler's writing wonderful melodies for the violin and announcing that he had found a new manuscript by Paganini. So piece after piece has appeared "Paganini - arranged by Kreisler." But it took the critics years to discover the hoax. I believe it was Olin Downes who finally discovered that Kreisler had arranged himself.

I once knew a pianist who loved to improvise and would say that it was by Tchaikowsky or some other Russian and no one caught him at it, much to his

I sit at concerts and watch the stern, concentrated faces of young people trying to understand what the moderns are trying to say when they write notes which only end up in noise. Then it is over. The conductor has exercised himself. He has had a workout. He has pulled notes out of instruments, as though the players could not get their sounds out of their fiddles and horns unless he, the conductor, moved arms and shoulders and even legs to distraction. Then one watches the ancient one, Monteux, conduct the same music without disturbing the audience and somehow it all sounds more beautiful. For one listens to the music rather than he devotes himself to the gyrations of a conductor. I have learned to close my eyes so that I do not see the maestro on the podium act out his part. The B.B.C. is to be congratulated for its sense of satire. It is needed to restore musical scores to music. (Copyright 1961, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

SUPPORT-President Kennedy has won virtually complete backing of Congress and the country for his $3.5 billion military buildup to meet the Berlin crisis and the intensified cold war. White House officials are jubilant over the reaction.

The United States has always been quick to unite behind its Presidents in times of national danger. The Berlin situation is no exception. Kennedy's problem now is to maintain the necessary sense of urgency in Congress and throughout the country.

When Kennedy spoke to the nation on the seriousness of the situation and his determination not to give ground on the Berlin issue, he was addressing himself primarily to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev. It was absolutely essential that Mr. K. should make no error in judgment based on a belief that the U.S. was "bluffing.

However, Kennedy was also speaking to the citizens of the U.S., for he needs them, as well as Khrushchev, to realize the seriousness of the world situation -that the U.S. is closer to a major war than most of its own people believe.

What Kennedy-and the United States-need now is a continuation of the surge of unity over the coming months. If the public should return to apathy and unconcern, if Congress should fall to bickering, it will only confirm for Khrushchev that the United States is divided.

Should this occur, America will be worse off than before Kennedy spoke, and the danger of war will be more immediate. For, once having aroused the country only to have it fall back, it will be difficult if not impossible to arouse it again short of actual their efforts to cause embarrassment. They are already trying to persuade Sweden to take only a limited participation in the enlarged Common Market plan. Norway and Denmark will seek full membership, so it may be that Sweden will find it hard to satisfy the demands of Russia.

The Soviets, on the other hand, it is pointed out by some economists, have always respected strength, especially in the economic field, and, if their propaganda tactics fail, they may suddenly decide to try to make a deal with the big Common Market operation. The merger of the two Common Markets appears to be the only development that promises to create a counterweight against Soviet dominance in Europe. Faced by this fact, Moscow may well try to come to terms with the group in order to get the heavy machinery and equipment, as well as consumer goods, it will need to carry out

Soviet economic-expansion plans. Economic strength, to be sure, sooner or later spells political power. That's why, incidentally, the Scandinavian governments would like to see the political aspects soft-pedaled at this time and only the economic factors stressed as the enlarged Common Market organization takes in new members and plans its future. This is one of the main reasons for the conference of the Prime Ministers of Norway, Sweden and Denmark. The fact is that, in the long run, if there is economic unity and economic prosperity, political strength will inevitably follow anyhow.

It could even be that at some future time a sensible Premier in Moscow will himself be applying for membership in the European common market. He might discover that some of the objectives of the Communist 20-year plan would have more chance of attainment during an era when armament spending is curtailed, and political crises are not chronic, than under the dangerous conditions that prevail internationally today.

West Berliners Appear Unworried About Threat Of War In Germany

(Editor's note - Drew Pearson has flown to Berlin to report direct on the city which has brought a crisis in the relations between the United States and Soviet Russia. His first report is published today.)

BERLIN - Even without the Kennedy · Khrushchev impasse, this city is by all odds the best place to study war. All around you in Berlin are the ghostly remants of war, the charred skeletons of once magnificent palaces, museums, opera houses grim reminders that if war comes again the White House may be such a skeleton.

Outwardly the people of West Berlin go about their business unworried that they may be on the brink of war again - again caused by their controversial, divided city. They don't want war, but they're accustomed to war. Also, they seem supremely confident Kennedy or Khrushchev or someone will pull them back from the brink.

I have been in Berlin before and after both World Warswars which Berlin started and from which Berlin suffered horribly.

cing out on them like half-starved alley cats pouncing on a mouse. Those were gruesome days in Berlin. They were the ones when little saddlemaker named Ebert, suddenly elevated to be President of the Weimar Republic, tried valiantly to bring economic stability to the vanquished wreck of Germany. Plaintively he told me of his troubles, of the Allied demands for reparations, of the impossibility of meeting those demands.

Hitler's Rampage

I came back to Berlin in 1937. In the 14 years that had passed, Germany had recovered - with the help of American bankers. Hitler was at the peak of his power. The Gestapo had taken over. I tried to phone the former German Ambassador to Washington. Wilhelm von Prottwitz, not a Hitler enthusiast. He almost fainted. He was too scared to talk over the phone or be seen with me any place.

Some of the bankers said Hitler would be good for Germany. He stood for order and efficiency. He had marched into the Ruhr and the Rhineland, seized the coal to strengthen German industry. But to the American newsmen in Berlin, watching the steady march of Nazism, war was only a matter of time.

War came two years later. And after it was over I went back to Berlin-a ghostly, cringing, pitiful city-bashed-in roofs . . . acres and acres of rubble . . . the once green trees of the Tiergarten, where the Kaiser used to shoot, so denuded you could hardly find a sapling alive . . . children living in cellars, their fathers killed, their mothers prostitutes, running in wolf packs at night. That was what the war had done to Berlin-a war that the leaders of Berlin made; a war that came back to punish the makers of war, and the innocent along with them, as few people pulled itself up to prosperity and have ever been punished before. Out Of The Ashes I came back to Berlin in 1953. It was eight years after the end of the second war. Berlin had progress: but not by its own bootstraps. Help from us had been ample. The conqueror had stooped to help the conquered.

February 1953 was a cold crisp winter. Food was scarce across the invisible border in East Germany. Food was ample, thanks to American imports, in West Germany. East German refugees began flocking across. They came in droves-the first big influx of an army which was to continue off and on for eight years, an army spurred on by the disparity between Communism and cap-

German Arms Again

By that time Germany had decided to raise its own army, and the Allies had removed the oncetight barriers against German rearmament. There was opposition to this in some parts of Europe and America but, strangely, almost more opposition in Germany

Boys had been taught to hate war. And, having been taught to hate war, they didn't want to be drafted into the machinery for making war.

But France had sent its NATO divisions to Africa to police Algeria. Britain found the burden NATO too expensive. The Eisenhower Administration wanted to cut military expenses. NATO was weak. The easy way out was to rearm Germany. So with misgivings in some places. and no great enthusiasm among the German people, Germany was rearmed.

I came back to Berlin again last year-May 1960-just before the summit conference in Paris that never reached the summit. In point of time, it was 15 years after the second war. I found unbelievable prosperity, great energy, great confidence, less opposition to rearmament, few memories of the suffering of two world wars.

That's Berlin-breeder of wars, blueprint of the catastrophe of war. Will it cause war again? You can understand why some of Germany's neighbors are worried.

Jim Bishop: Reporter

By Thomas Mitchell

(Editor's note: Jim Bishop has left for Europe and will write from abroad in about a week. Today's column was written by Thomas Mitchell, the renowned actor.)

The world thinks when it should feel, and feels when it should think. That's the trouble. Me. I'm the feeling type. I'd better be. I'm an actor by trade, and an actor who thinks is a dead duck.

I'm 69, pushing 70, and at that age a man has a license to be pontifical. It comes with the calendar. I started life in Elizabethport. New Jersey. The place is famous, not for having spawned Mitchells, but for a big Singer Sewing machine factory.

However, when my brief candle gutters out, the matter will be briefly inscribed on stone. There is an interim between the first date and the second, and this interests me. This fraction in the table of time; this little breathing spell. What happened before the first date on the headstone, and what happens after the second, is material for the philosopher. It has no place in my saga. I was born on July 11, 1892, in a stable. There were no shepherds, no wise men. Our house had burned down and the family was living in a barn. Our home had been an abandoned theatre with living quarters upstairs. A sign near the roof said "Mitchell Building." It is, I think, an omen that all but the last four letters of my name burned down.

In the time between then and now, I have tried to be myselfwithout pretense, without flash, just a beetle-browed actor who has never stopped studying his craft and has never learned all there is to know about it. In my roles. I have tried to create a convincing illusion, and sometimes I have succeeded. Life has, at times, slipped me a few golden coins of luck and, at others, has taken them away.

My story is not original. It is the story of all men of all time. The wonderment in my heart is not what happened to me, but what has happened to all the others? I grew up with great hosts of kids. Sometimes, when no one presses me, I can tick them off by name and face and disposition. Where are they now? I have passed the 69th milestone and I look back over my shoulder and won-

All of us were moulded from the same clay. The hand of the Potter seldom slips. Some started to grow up and failed to pass the physical. Some were maimed in early struggles with life and surrendered, rather than fight on. A few lasted until recently. We start off crowded for elbow room and end up walking alone on a vast desert .-

The older I get the more convinced I am that life itself is a foe. A formidable one. Happiness is not an integral part of life. It's a momentary illusion. Hardship and disappointment are the concomitants of normal living. You learn to live with those two, or

ing everything and, if we study hard enough and long enough, we become wise enough at the end to realize that we know nothing.

You think I am downcast? Morbid, perhaps? Oh no. I'm a man with a perpetual smile. The fact that I see life as a little mote in the eye of eternity does not mean that I miss the sparkle in that eye. I've had joy out of the life, in between battles and temporary victories. There is even a joy in being able to write these thoughts, exactly as I see them, and know that they are not going to be altered by some press agent wearing a size six and three-quarters

As I grow older, my joys become simpler. A glass with some ice in it; a few trusted friends; some sensible conversation and plain food and I feel like a schoolkid on his first date. I'm winging. The hours speed by in reminiscences and the night breeze dies in an explosion of laughter.

The joys do not delude me to the truth. I know too well that, on this planet, the servile pass for humble, the respectable are called worthy, and the wealthy are accorded the status of the wise. Before a man finishes his boot training here, he is a veritable scarecrow, stripped to the essentials. He winces at betrayal, and obliquely, like Botticelli's monks slightly tipped.

Where are they now, my contemporaries? At the 69th pole, I look around and call their names to be denied an echo. Who is the winner? He who leaves last or he who leaves first? I do not know. There is so much that I do not

Physicians pick up many clews suggestive of certain physical and emotional disorders. They rival Sherlock Holmes in their ability to observe and deduct, and write their findings for publication in medical journals.

The bad teeth sign is an example. This is noted in persons who have enough money to see a dentist but somehow find an excuse to put off going. They are not tight or careless - just afraid. This fear is associated with a highly nervous disposition.

The puddle sign is another indication of tenseness. A patient of this type perspires profusely, especially in the armpits. When he gets off the examining table, he is likely to leave two wet spots on the sheet where sweat has

In a federal court in New Mexico, a granite-visaged old indian came up on a charge of manufacturing and selling fire water. He showed no sign of recognition when the judge or the lawyer appointed for him by the court spoke to him. The judge, anxious to get on with the day's work, decided, "This old boy doesn't understand a word of English. Probably he's unaware he even broke the law. Case dismissed.'

Informed that he was free to go, the Indian nevertheless remained in the courtroom and listened while a white man, up on identical charge, made an impassioned declaration of his inno-

Mike Kasnick won his sixth victory without a loss vesterday as he pitched the Frostburg Merchants to a 7-4 triumph over Barrelville's Old Exports in the Pen Mar Baseball League at Frostburg.

The win enabled the Merchants to remain on the heels of leagueeading Hyndman which won at Mt. Savage, 8-3.

Frostburg jumped on starter Ed Parsons for three runs in the first inning when Allan Eisel walked, Gene Zumpano doubled Dick Pitko walked, Eisel scored on a passed ball, and Joe Langan singled home two more runs.

Kasnick made the lead stand up by scattering 10 hits over the nine-inning route. He whiffed seven and walked three as Frost burg won its 15th game of the Parsons helted a home run and two singles to pace Barrelville at the plate while teammates Donnie Lewies and Dorcil Kline each had a pair of hits. One of Lewis' base knocks was a two-

Six Are Hurt In Crash West Of Somerset

Faulty Truck Brakes Blamed

Four persons, including three children of a Berkeley, Mo., family, were hospitalized yesterday afternoon in a five-vehicle accident on the Pennsylvania Turnpike about 10 miles west of the Somerset Interchange.

Faulty brakes on a truck were blamed for the accident at 3:28 p. m. (EST) near the west portal of Laurel Tunnel.

Admitted to Somerset Community Hospiital were:

Michael S. Wood, 22-month-old son of Carl D. Wood Jr. 28, and his wife, Nancy, 27, who were treated and released. The youngster, whose condition is reported "not good", sustained extensive abrasions on his head, face, arms

Cheryl Wood, three, who sustained abrasions of her head and

Carlene Wood, six, who sustained abrasions of her head, bruised back and chest. Carlene and Cheryl are both "fair." Marshall A. Susler, 31, of Decatur. Ill., who sustained a fractured nose, is in "fair" condition. Mr. Wood, said police, suffered abrasions on his left arm and head. His wife sustained abrasions on her arms and legs.

Police reported that John Nymich, 21, of Boswell, Pa., came up on the slow traffic at the approach of the tunnel, and his brakes failed.

His truck hit a sedan driven by Peter Petrofino, 43, of New Cumberland, Pa., which hit the rear of a car driven by Mr. Susler.

Petrofino's car hit the Wood car, which was coming west. The truck also hit a car driven by Owen W. Shannon, 51, of Camp exception of the Wood car were

Fishing Rodeo Has 100 Winners

Not all of the some 1,800 youngsters who attended the 13th annual Fishing Rodeo at Oldtown Saturday received prizes, as did Kenneth Davis, left, 9-year-oldson of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Davis, Mill Run Road, who won the P. O. Weber trophy after he caught a 14-inch bass. But all of the children, as did 4-yearold Pamela Jenks, seen at right with her father, Joseph C. Jenks, Baltimore, had a good time and a refreshing drink of milk donated by Cumberland areadairies. Pamela and her parents were visiting Mr. and Mrs. Harry Castle, 1142 Braddock Road. More than 100 prizes were awarded during the event.

Legislative Maverick

Lee, a legislative mayerick throughout the Tawes administration, said, "I for one will remain as an anti-Tawes candidate."

The legislator's sharply-worded statement described the offer "from the Tawes camp" as an example of the technique of dangling political plums in the path of potential opponents.

"I refuse to bite," he said. "If candidates continue to be bought off with this sort of political manipulation, the Democratic voters ultimately will be deprived of a fair choice in primary elections, and our party will lose its tradition of vigor and vitality," he said.

Pilot Eats, Naps Aboard Craft

By GEORGE SYVERTSEN

MOSCOW (AP)-The Soviet Union rocketed a space ship into orbit Sunday, the pilot had lunch and supper as he circled the earth, then said goodnight by radio and went to sleep for the night. There were predictions he will land Monday after 24 hours aloft, and at least 17 trips around the earth.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va. (AP) -History book names are coming alive in historic Jefferson County Court House here.

A jampacked courtroom of more than 250 persons Saturday night watched a re-enactment of the trial of John Brown in the same courtroom where the bearded abolitionist was convicted of treason 102 years ago.

The occasion was the premiere showing of a two-act drama, "The Anvil," sponsored by the Jefferson County Civil War Centennial

The play was presented twice Sunday night, and there will continue to be two shows nightly through next Sunday, Aug. 13. Robert Leonard, a gray-bearded

Showing Off Our Naval Strength

The Soviet Union has the biggest submarine force in the world. The U.S. Navy is unequalled in power. These two basic military postulates are being exploited for all they're worth, politically, in the muscle-flexing over Berlin.

Russia chose Soviet Navy Day, July 31, to parade its sea power in the Neva River off Leningrad. The ships ranged from a cruiser to small craft. A number of conventional submarines rode at anchor, but the missile-armed atomic submarines - in which Russia claims numerical superiority to the United States - were not in sight. Russia, contrary to its boasts, may have only two or three nuclear subs, these being almost operational. At any rate, our carrierbased aircraft, reinforcing our Polaris subs and land-based bombers encircling the Soviet Union, give us greater capability to deliver nuclear warheads. Russia has no aircraft carriers.

On the other hand, conventional warfare over Berlin would strain U.S. naval resources. Shipping lanes could be mined by Soviet aircraft such as the Bounder bomber shown at the Moscow air show July 9, and by the vast Soviet sub fleet. The U.S. Navy does not have enough antisubmarine ships and aircraft, but on the same day as the Soviet naval show, the Pentagon disclosed plans to reactivate at least 40 mothballed ships - 22 troop and cargo transports and 18 or more small antisub craft.

As for defense, the month-long exercises the Navy is beginning today in cooperation with Latin American forces are frankly intended to demonstrate power to defend the Western Hemisphere against submarine attack. U.S. naval units will consist of four destroyer types, the submarine USS Clamagore and a detachment of P2V Neptune aircraft of Patrol Squadron II.

The U.S. ships will circumnavigate South America. It's a reasonable assumption that they'll have an attentive audience; Russian radar ships and trawlers have rather a habit of turning up in waters far from home.

Not Really A Hoax

The British taste of humor is pungent and daring but rarely has it reached such perfection as the British Broadcasting Corporation perpetrated. They manufactured a composer, Piotz Zak, said to be a Pole and they played a composition by the aforesaid Zak, entitled "Mobile for Tape and Percussion." No such Zak exists or ever existed. No Polish composer bears such a name. The name is phoney from every standpoint, just as the so-called music is phoney. B.B.C. was having lots of fun and did not get caught.

According to Susan Bradshaw, an employe of the B.B.C. music division, she and Hans Keller, another employe, pulled off the hoax with official approval. "We dragged together all the instruments we could find and went around the studio banging them.'

I wish I might have heard their satire. I am sure that it could not be very different from some of the modern composers who seek to prove not that they can make music but rather that they have been to school and have learned instrumentation. They establish beyond doubt that they know the difference between a tympanum and a bass drum, to say nothing of the difference between a bassoon and a bass fiddle.

Having established their great knowledge of the mechanics of music-making devices, these composers need ideas, emotions, sincerity to put together something that can be remembered and repeated. This takes not only intelligence but maturity. This, of course, does not come readily. Wagner, for instance, wrote purposeful music. He had a goal, an ideal, a passion. He revised the ancient traditions of the Teutonic peoples, just as Verdi inspired revolutionary nationalism as an Italian ideal. If such composers dragged together a bunch of instruments and just made noise, they would undoubtedly have done as well as the present noisemakers who only make so much noise to cover up their paucity if ideas.

But the B.B.C. folks did not lack ideas, just as Wu Ting-fang knew what he was doing when he invented Chop Suey. It is said that when he was ambassador to the United States, some callers asked him if he could concoct some Chinese food for them. They did not know that no Chinese gentleman goes into a kitchen and that their request was vulgar But Wu Ting-fang was no vulgarian. Politely, he went into his kitchen, took all the leftovers in the icebox, threw them into a pot, covered them with soy bean oil, and a little of this and that for flavoring, heated the stuff and called it Chop Suey. Perhaps that is how some ancient Hungarian invented goulash or some Frenchwoman discovered the possibilities of bouillabaisse. (The same tale is told of Lin Hung-

B.B.C. manufactured a musical Chop Suey, without meaning, without form or taste, a confusion of sound and the music critics listened attentively and wrote learned reviews. It is like Fritz Kreisler's writing wonderful melodies for the violin and announcing that he had found a new manuscript by Paganini. So piece after piece has appeared "Paganini - arranged by Kreisler." But it took the critics years to discover the hoax. I believe it was Olin Downes who finally discovered that Kreisler had arranged himself.

I once knew a pianist who loved to improvise and would say that it was by Tchaikowsky or some other Russian and no one caught him at it, much to his

I sit at concerts and watch the stern, concentrated faces of young people trying to understand what the moderns are trying to say when they write notes which only end up in noise. Then it is over. The conductor has exercised himself. He has had a workout. He has pulled notes out of instruments, as though the players could not get their sounds out of their fiddles and horns unless he, the conductor, moved arms and shoulders and even legs to distraction. Then one watches the ancient one, Monteux, conduct the same music without disturbing the audience and somehow it all sounds more beautiful. For one listens to the music rather than he devotes himself to the gyrations of a conductor. I have learned to close my eyes so that I do not see the maestro on the podium act out his part. The B.B.C. is to be congratulated for its sense of atire. It is needed to restore musical scores to music. (Copyright 1961, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

How Will Common Market Affect Moscow?

IN EUROPE. Aug 5 - What does Russia think of the "Common Market" idea? What effect will Britain's decision to work closely with the Continental countries have on Moscow? What impact will it have on the satellite countries which are left isolated as they see their former associates in Europe moving toward a stronger and stronger economic

These questions are even more important today here in Europe than the special problems that Britain faces with her commonwealth associates, or the dilemma confronting Sweden and Finland, which dislike to become entangled in any kind of political union that might be resented by the Soviets. Neither country has joined NATO.

Is Moscow, however, irreconcilably opposed to the enlarged Common Market plan? While hostile propaganda against it continues over the air waves, the Russians have never pinpointed their objections except from the political viewpoint. In fact, it is conceivable that in the long run the Soviets may find a united economic entity in the Western part of Europe easier to deal with than the present setup of two rival organizations.

For the moment, Moscow keeps hammering away that Britain, in oining the European Economic Community, is making a mistake and is diminishing her influence in Europe. But these tactics are obviously designed to embarrass, if not discourage, the whole Common Market movement. The Communists are well aware that the European Economic Community is destined to develop successfully, and hence it may well be that, when the new organization finally gets firmly established, the Moscow policy will be changed to one of friendliness, instead of hostility. Indeed, there may come a time when the Soviets will be maneuvering to build up more trade for the satellite countries as well as for them-the fact that a consolidated market in Western Europe comprising 300,000,000 people means a huge industrial capacity and rapid progress in living standards, along with improvements in social conditions. Despite all the utopian promises in the new 20-year Communist Party program, the fact remains that the peoples of East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the other satellite countries in Eastern Europe will be hearing every day of the realistic growth of the Western countries. News like this travels across international boundaries despite censorship of the press and radio.

In a political sense, therefore, the Russians have much to fear and, if they find they cannot really block the movement, they may in the long run try to associate Russia even gave permission to Finland within the last two years to join the European Free Trade Association - known as "The Seven" - as an "associate member." and offered no objection to Sweden's action in becoming a full-pledged member. Nor was any effort made by Moscow to stop Austria from joining. This does not mean that the Soviets acquiesce in everything "The Seven" have done In fact the Russians demanded of the organization that the so-called "most favored nation treatment" be granted on certain exports which are part of the Soviets' trade arrangements with all Western countries. Britain and other countries objected. Only Finland paid heed to the Russian request.

SUPPORT-President Kennedy has won virtually complete backing of Congress and the country for his $3.5 billion military buildup to meet the Berlin crisis and the intensified cold war. White House officials are jubilant over

The United States has always been quick to unite behind its Presidents in times of national danger. The Berlin situation is no exception. Kennedy's problem now is to maintain the necessary sense of urgency in Congress and throughout the country.

When Kennedy spoke to the nation on the seriousness of the situation and his determination not to give ground on the Berlin issue, he was addressing himself primarily to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev. It was absolutely essential that Mr. K. should make no error in judgment based on a belief that the U.S. was

However, Kennedy was also speaking to the citizens of the U.S., for he needs them, as well as Khrushchev, to realize the seriousness of the world situation -that the U.S. is closer to a major war than most of its own people believe.

What Kennedy-and the United States-need now is a continuation of the surge of unity over the coming months. If the public should return to apathy and unconcern, if Congress should fall to bickering, it will only confirm for Khrushchev that the United States is divided.

Should this occur, America will be worse off than before Kennedy spoke, and the danger of war will be more immediate. For, once having aroused the country only to have it fall back, it will be difficult if not impossible to arouse it again short of actual

their efforts to cause embarrassment. They are already trying to persuade Sweden to take only a limited participation in the enlarged Common Market plan. Norway and Denmark will seek full membership, so it may be that Sweden will find it hard to satisfy the demands of Russia.

The Soviets, on the other hand, it is pointed out by some economists, have always respected strength, especially in the economic field, and, if their propaganda tactics fail, they may suddenly decide to try to make a deal with the big Common Market operation. The merger of the two Common Markets appears to be the only development that promises to create a counterweight against Soviet dominance in Europe. Faced by this fact, Moscow may well try to come to terms with the group in order to get the heavy machinery and ourse, to abandon right away equipment, as well as consumer goods, it will need to carry out Soviet economic-expansion plans.

Economic strength, to be sure, sooner or later spells political power. That's why, incidentally, the Scandinavian governments would like to see the political aspects soft-pedaled at this time and only the economic factors stressed as the enlarged Common Market organization takes in new members and plans its future. This is one of the main reasons for the conference of the Prime Ministers of Norway, Sweden and Denmark. The fact is that, in the long run, if there is economic unity and economic prosperity, political strength will inevitably follow anyhow

It could even be that at some future time a sensible Premier in Moscow will himself be applying for membership in the European common market. He might discover that some of the objectives of the Communist 20-year plan would have more chance of attainment during an era when armament spending is curtailed. and political crises are not chronic, than under the dangerous conditions that prevail internationally today.

West Berliners Appear Unworried

About Threat Of War In Germany

By Drew Pearson

Those were gruesome days in Berlin. They were the ones when a little saddlemaker named Ebert, suddenly elevated to be President of the Weimar Republic. tried valiantly to bring economic stability to the vanquished wreck of Germany. Plaintively he told me of his troubles, of the Allied demands for reparations, of the impossibility of meeting those demands.

Hitler's Rampage

I came back to Berlin in 1937. In the 14 years that had passed, Germany had recovered - with the help of American bankers. Hitler was at the peak of his power. The Gestapo had taken over. I tried to phone the former German Ambassador to Washington, Wilhelm von Prottwitz, not a Hitler enthusiast. He almost fainted. He was too scared to talk over the phone or be seen with me any place.

Some of the bankers said Hitler would be good for Germany. He stood for order and efficiency. He had marched into the Ruhr and the Rhineland, seized the coal to strengthen German industry. But to the American newsmen in Berlin, watching the steady march of Nazism, war was only a matter of time.

War came two years later. And after it was over I went back to Berlin-a ghostly, cringing, pitiful city-bashed-in roofs . . . acres and acres of rubble . . . the once green trees of the Tiergarten, where the Kaiser used to shoot, so denuded you could hardly find a sapling alive . . . children living in cellars, their fathers killed, their mothers prostitutes, running in wolf packs at night.

That was what the war had done to Berlin-a war that the leaders of Berlin made; a war that came back to punish the makers of war, and the innocent along with them, as few people have ever been punished before. Out Of The Ashes

I came back to Berlin in 1953. It was eight years after the end of the second war. Berlin had pulled itself up to prosperity and bootstraps. Help from us had been ample. The conqueror had stooped to help the conquered.

February 1953 was a cold crisp winter, Food was scarce across the invisible border in East Germany. Food was ample, thanks to American imports, in West Germany. East German refugees began flocking across. They came in droves-the first big influx of an army which was to continue off and on for eight years, an army spurred on by the disparity between Communism and cap-

German Arms Again

By that time Germany had decided to raise its own army, and the Allies had removed the oncetight barriers against German rearmament. There was opposition to this in some parts of Europe and America but, strangely, almost more opposition in Germany

Boys had been taught to hate war. And, having been taught to hate war, they didn't want to be drafted into the machinery for making war.

But France had sent its NATO divisions to Africa to police Algeria. Britain found the burden of NATO too expensive. The Eisenhower Administration wanted to cut military expenses. NATO was weak. The easy way out was to rearm Germany. So with misgivings in some places, and no great enthusiasm among the German people, Germany was rearmed.

I came back to Berlin again last year-May 1960-just before the summit conference in Paris that never reached the summit. In point of time, it was 15 years after the second war. I found unbelievable prosperity, great energy, great confidence, less opposition to rearmament, few memories of the suffering of two world wars.

That's Berlin-breeder of wars, blueprint of the catastrophe of war. Will it cause war again? You can understand why some of Germany's neighbors are worried.

The world thinks when it should feel, and feels when it should think. That's the trouble. Me. I'm the feeling type. I'd better be. I'm an actor by trade, and an actor who thinks is a dead duck.

I'm 69, pushing 70, and at that age a man has a license to be pontifical. It comes with the calendar. I started life in Elizabethport, New Jersey. The place is famous, not for having spawned Mitchells, but for a big Singer Sewing machine factory.

However, when my brief candle gutters out, the matter will be briefly inscribed on stone. There is an interim between the first date and the second, and this interests me. This fraction in the table of time: this little breathing spell. What happened before the first date on the headstone, and what happens after the second. is material for the philosopher. It has no place in my saga.

I was born on July 11, 1892, in a stable. There were no shepherds, no wise men. Our house had burned down and the family was living in a barn. Our home had been an abandoned theatre with living quarters upstairs. A sign near the roof said "Mitchell Building." It is, I think, an omen that all but the last four letters of my name burned down.

In the time between then and now, I have tried to be myselfwithout pretense, without flash, just a beetle-browed actor who has never stopped studying his craft and has never learned all there is to know about it. In my roles. I have tried to create a convincing illusion, and sometimes I have succeeded. Life has, at times, slipped me a few golden coins of luck and, at others, has taken them away.

My story is not original. It is the story of all men of all time. The wonderment in my heart is not what happened to me, but what has happened to all the others? I grew up with great hosts of kids. Sometimes, when no one presses me, I can tick them off by name and face and disposition. Where are they now? I have passed the 69th milestone and I look back over my shoulder and won-

The older I get the more convinced I am that life itself is a foe. A formidable one. Happiness is not an integral part of life. It's a momentary illusion. Hardship and disappointment are the concomitants of normal living. You learn to live with those two, or

The joys do not delude me to the truth. I know too well that, on this planet, the servile pass for humble, the respectable are called worthy, and the wealthy are accorded the status of the wise. Before a man finishes his boot training here, he is a veritable scarecrow, stripped to the essentials. He winces at betrayal, and obliquely, like Botticelli's monks slightly tipped.

The owl sign has a more scientific description. It is normal for the pupils to dilate when it is dark, to bring the maximum amount of light into the eyes. They constrict on entering a bright room or going out of doors, to reduce exposure.

This is an automatic process which is under the control of the sympathetic nervous system. But some men and women are so keved up their pupils remain dilated even when sitting in a well lighted room. Apparently the nervous stimulation overcomes the stimulation from light. I have been told this occurs most often in attractive nervous young girls which may be responsible for the sparkle in their eyes.

Titov, the son of a schoolteachr, sent repeated reports he was feeling fine. On his second orbit, Titov sent Khrushchev a message telling him everything was proceeding normally.

The Soviet premier radioed back telling Titov: "All the Soviet people rejoice boundlessly in your successful flight and are proud of you.'

Later, Titov sent back thanks for Khrushchev's "fatherly concern," adding: "I will carry out the assignment of the party and government without fail. Tell this to Nikita Khrushchev.'

Faulty Truck Brakes Blamed

Four persons, including three children of a Berkeley, Mo., family, were hospitalized yesterday afternoon in a five-vehicle accident on the Pennsylvania Turnpike about 10 miles west of the Somerset Interchange.

Faulty brakes on a truck were blamed for the accident at 3:28 p. m. (EST) near the west portal of Laurel Tunnel.

Admitted to Somerset Community Hospiital were:

Michael S. Wood, 22-month-old son of Carl D. Wood Jr. 28, and his wife, Nancy, 27, who were treated and released. The youngster, whose condition is reported "not good", sustained extensive abrasions on his head, face, arms

Cheryl Wood, three, who sustained abrasions of her head and

Carlene Wood, six, who sustained abrasions of her head, bruised back and chest. Carlene and Cheryl are both "fair."

Marshall A. Susler, 31, of Decatur, Ill., who sustained a fractured nose, is in "fair" condition. Mr. Wood, said police, suffered abrasions on his left arm and head. His wife sustained abrasions on her arms and legs. Police reported that John

Nymich, 21, of Boswell, Pa., came up on the slow traffic at the approach of the tunnel, and his brakes failed

His truck hit a sedan driven by Peter Petrofino, 43, of New Cumberland, Pa., which hit the rear of a car driven by Mr. Susler. Petrofino's car hit the Wood car, which was coming west. The truck also hit a car driven by Owen W. Shannon, 51, of Camp Hill, Pa., according to police, who said all the vehicles with the exception of the Wood car were

Fishing Rodeo Has 100 Winners

Widow Will Accept

Not all of the some 1,800 youngsters who attended the 13th annual Fishing Rodeo at Oldtown Saturday received prizes, as did Kenneth Davis, left, 9-year-oldson of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Davis, Mill Run Road, who won the P. O. Weber trophy after he caught a 14-inch bass. But all of the children, as did 4-yearold Pamela Jenks, seen at right with her father, Joseph C. Jenks, Baltimore, had a good time and a refreshing drink of milk donated by Cumberland areadairies. Pamela and her parents were visiting Mr. and Mrs. Harry Castle, 1142 Braddock Road. More than 100 prizes were awarded during the event.

Causes Ripple In Political Pot Reportedly Eyeing Congressman Post

O'Conor Name

By The Associated Press The name of Herbert R.O'Conor Jr. is the latest to cause ripples in Maryland's boiling Democratic political pot. O'Conor, lawyer-son of the late governor and U. S. senator, reportedly is eyeing the Democratic nomination for congressman at

Some party leaders in O'Conor's native Baltimore and in the counties are said to be urging Gov. Tawes to put O'Conor on his That spot apparently is open.

Del. Blair Lee III, D-Montgomery, said Saturday he had rejected an offer to fill it Lee, a 45-year-old Silver Spring businessman, said "it is my firm intent to continue along my original course and seek the Democratic nomination for U.S. senator

Legislative Maverick

Lee, a legislative maverick throughout the Tawes administration, said, "I for one will remain as an anti-Tawes candidate.'

The legislator's sharply-worded statement described the offer 'from the Tawes camp" as an example of the technique of dangling political plums in the path of potential opponents.

"I refuse to bite," he said. "If candidates continue to be bought off with this sort of political manipulation, the Democratic voters ultimately will be deprived of a fair choice in primary elections, and our party will lose its tradition of vigor and vitality,"
